TJSL Student-Business Mixer a Huge Success

“This is phenomenal - so well put together,” said Justin Hall 1L at the business mixer held Friday evening February 1 at TJSL. “A lot of hard work and dedication was put into this and it is so beneficial for the students.”

The event was designed to give the more than 80 law students who attended an opportunity to network with the owners of more than 30 downtown businesses and forge relationships. But it turned out to be much more than that and included a visit from San Diego Mayor Bob Filner.

The highly successful mixer was also a celebration of the involvement the law students already have with so many of the businesses surrounding the law school and, just as important, a chance for those businesses to support the students.

“I want to get more involved with the community and, in turn, foster the students – be a mentor,” said Scott Lutwak, who owns FIT Athletic and Brooklyn Bagels, both heavily patronized buy TJSL students.

“These students are a great source of business for me,” said Mark James, owner of 7th Avenue Cleaners. “I love the students - they are the heart of this community,” he added commenting on why he came to support them.

“These are very important relationships for law students to have,” Amy Buchanan 2L said. “Not just to support their businesses as customers, but to be possible attorneys for them after law school.”

That was the very purpose of the event – to show the businesses owners that TJSL students can be valuable to them as attorneys and even employees because of the skills their law degrees provide.

“I love talking about the alternatives and options you have with a JD degree,” said Brittany Harvey, a law school graduate herself, and the Director of Student Facilitation and Mediation at Bridgepoint Education. “A JD allows you to work in a diverse set of industries with a skill set a lot of people don’t have.”

It was also a night to be inspired, as special guest Stampp Corbin addressed those who attended with a very powerful message about “thinking beyond the horizon and not setting limits for yourself.” The entrepreneur told the audience, “Where ever your horizon lies – think beyond it. Break through the limits you set for yourself.”
“Corbin, who once worked on the presidential campaign of then-candidate Barack Obama, thinks the president is an apt role model for his audience. “Mr. Obama was once a young law student just like you – and he was thinking beyond the horizon and not setting limits on himself.”

“Corbin was inspirational,” said Samantha Morales 2L. “He inspired us to be creative with our law degree.”

“It was really inspiring,” said Stuart Melman 2L. “I want to own my own business someday and his talk reenergized me.”

“It’s nice to see so many of the businesses we support come to support us,” said Dan Schmeichel 2L.

“This is fabulous! This is a great turnout!,” said Jared Clark 2L, one of the event’s four organizers. “This opens the lines of communication between the law students and business. We’re all neighbors.”

“Ever since we moved to the East Village, we have tried to be good neighbors and good citizens,” TJSL Dean Rudy Hasl told the group. “And by being here, you all recognize the importance of networking and building relationships.”

Though he wasn’t at the event in person due to a brief hospitalization, Lance Henry 3L’s presence and spirit were strongly felt at the event that was his brainchild.

“The event is all I’ve been focusing on for the past several months,” said Henry, who got out of the hospital the next morning. “It’s like not being there for the birth of your child – it’s devastating. But I feel great how successful it was.”

The other organizers, in addition to Henry and Clark, included Ryan Davis and Rexy Rolle, both 2Ls.

“I met my boss at an event like this,” said Bret Goda ‘11, one of four panelists who met with the students and alumni who attended. Now, Goda is a financial advisor at AXA and manages assets for the many attorneys he has as clients.

Goda was one of many TJSL alumni who were at the event.

“It’s exciting to see so many alumni working here locally,” said Kelly Hayes 3L. “And it’s such a great idea to have these local businesses get acquainted with TJSL students.”

“These students will be the vitality of the neighborhood,” said Mark James.

“Now that I’m graduating, it’s great to meet with the owners and find out how they view law students,” said Molly Fashola 3L. “We bring a fresh set of eyes and a new perspective. We are the new generation.”

And according to Lance Henry, it’s a new generation that brings a lot to the table.

“The main reason for this whole event was to bring the business and the legal community together,” Henry said. “There are economic problems, but together we can solve any economic problem. We have all these resources between us and we can solve these problems together.”
Father and Daughter Reunited by TJSL Alumna

It was a good day on July 12, 2012 when Alexis Scott ’07 with the San Diego based firm Solare & Scott was able to tell her client Josh Smith that his daughter Kailey was coming home for good.

"I am a father and I could not have gotten my daughter back in my arms without the tremendous work done by Alexis Scott," said Smith. "I now have my five-year-old daughter back in my life AND with full custody after her mom abducted her and fled the state in 2009."

"For me, knowing that my client’s child was now going to be with a parent that could provide a stable, safe and loving home made me incredibly happy," Scott said.

Scott got involved in this child custody case in early 2012 that resulted in Smith being reunited with his daughter two years after the child’s mother took Kailey from San Diego and fled to Washington State.

“So often in child custody situations we deal with mothers and fathers who want to shirk their responsibilities as a parent,” said Scott. “My client wanted nothing more than to be a good father to his daughter. Being able to be a part of changing their lives for the better will always be one of my greatest achievements.”

According to Scott the birth mother, who was not married to Smith, took their daughter Kailey, even though Smith’s client had been awarded 100 percent custody.

“I had her personally served and then filed for a contempt proceeding to hold her in contempt for violating the orders,” Scott said. “Since contempt motions are quasi-criminal the process took a while.”

After not showing up for the arraignment and contempt hearing, the mother was found to be in contempt and a warrant was issued. "Once we had the warrant and court order from the court, my client was able to go to Washington and have the authorities enforce the order and my client got his child back almost immediately,” Scott explains.

“An outcome like this makes all the other frustrating cases worth it. His daughter is doing extremely well and clearly missed her father.”

“I wasted precious time and money with the wrong lawyer for over a year,” said Smith. When I hired Alexis and Tony Solare, they fixed the mistakes made by my previous lawyer and covered all the bases to ensure that I received full physical and legal custody of my daughter “It cannot go unmentioned how extremely difficult it is for a father to receive custody of his child, but Alexis Scott did it!”
How Washington State Legalized Marijuana

“Nobody thought it would happen,” said Alison Holcomb, the Washington ACLU attorney who authored Initiative 502, the landmark measure that voters passed to make marijuana legal in Washington State. “But it really wasn’t about legalizing marijuana – it was about the war on drugs which leads to mass incarceration of people on marijuana charges.”

Holcomb shared the story of the bumpy road I-502 took from inception to passage on Wednesday, January 30, at “How Washington State Legalized Marijuana,” an event presented by TJSL’s Center for Law and Social Justice (CLSJ), directed by Professor Alex Kreit.

Although Holcomb shared statistics show that Blacks and Latinos were much more likely to be prosecuted before 502 passed, the campaign was sold to the voters on a cost savings basis – how many millions the justice system could save and how many millions, if not billions, the state would earn in revenue from taxes on the legalized and regulated sale of marijuana.

“The way to reform is to talk about money and monetary arguments,” Holcomb told the audience, “not to emphasize the racial disparities in marijuana prosecutions, which the voters just don’t want to listen to.”

Of course, now that 502 has been enacted into law, there are still major legal issues that have to be decided, according to Holcomb. The big question is whether the Federal Controlled Substances Act supersedes Washington State’s – or any state’s laws. That’s the federal preemption issue. The other issue, Holcomb says, is dual sovereignty between the states and the federal government – “Does the state law undermine the Controlled Substances Act?”

Holcomb feels that “federal law is not preempted unless state law requires someone to violate federal law – which is a positive conflict.” At the same time, under the Tenth Amendment, the federal government can’t force a state to make something illegal. ”And the federal government can’t force a state to enforce federal laws,” Holcomb said.

So far, U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder has been silent on the issue of whether the Justice Department will enforce its laws in Washington. If there is litigation on the Washington State law, “it will be putting federal policy on trial,” Holcomb said. “Also, 502 didn’t rewrite Washington’s uniform drug code – it just created exceptions.”

The initiative created very strict controls on the growing, distribution and possession of marijuana in the state and the aim of the measure was to “replace criminalization with responsible public health policy,” said Holcomb.

The marijuana legalization campaign was spinning its wheels in the beginning, Holcomb pointed out, but got traction when the former U.S. Attorney for Western Washington, John McKay, made a TV commercial endorsing I-502. In it, he said, “Marijuana laws need to be reformed from top to bottom – they just don’t work. Filling our courts and jails has failed to reduce marijuana use.”

The stage is set for some kind of showdown over the new Washington State marijuana law. “What’s going to happen?” Holcomb asked. “Consult your Magic Eight Ball.”

“The presentation given by Alison Holcomb was very eye-opening,” said Crystal Bagheri 2L, who attended the presentation. “She was extremely knowledgeable in her field and the way the ACLU passed the Prop 502 initiative in Washington is commendable. I found it especially important to note that the new initiative could potentially make millions for the state and that the focus of the profits will be public health concerns.”
