

Thomas Jefferson School of Law

Despite still being under construction, the new Thomas Jefferson Law School campus has already made a significant impact within the East Village skyline with the building's arching roof; a severe contrast to the flat tops of downtown San Diego. The law school, currently housed in several old office buildings in Old Town, is in desperate need of a physical upgrade. The new design will keep the focus on the needs of the students as well as incorporating programmatic elements that invite the downtown community to experience what the school has to offer. For the students, the new campus boasts spacious classrooms and study areas, large outdoor terraces, and three levels of underground, private parking. For the public, the bottom floor will include law offices, a bookstore, a cafe, and a legal clinic that will be operated by the school. The move is very much needed for a school that is looking to increase its student body and expand its presence in San Diego as well as nationally.
