The longest serving law school dean in America recently announced that he will be resigning next year after more than three decades of leadership in legal education. Rudy Hasl, Dean and President of Thomas Jefferson School of Law (TJSL), will step down on June 30, 2013, concluding 32 years of service at four different ABA law schools, including TJSL, Saint Louis University, St. John’s University and Seattle University.

The TJSL Board of Trustees has appointed a search committee to start the process of identifying candidates who would be interested in becoming Dean and President of the law school.

“With a new facility in the East Village of San Diego’s downtown area and recent membership in the Association of American Law Schools, the School is particularly well positioned for a creative leadership opportunity,” said Dean Hasl. “The faculty members are actively engaged in scholarly activities and have placed a genuine value on the quality of the teaching they provide.”

Dean Rudy Hasl to Step Down in June 2013

During his tenure as TJSL’s dean since July 1, 2005, he has significantly increased the diversity of the faculty and staff as well as the student population so that TJSL is consistently ranked as one of the most diverse law schools in the nation. He has added several new and successful academic programs, including international business and comparative law summer study abroad programs in Hangzhou, China, and Nice, France; an academic center for Sports Law & Policy; fellowship programs in intellectual property, criminal law and sports law; three LL.M. programs, one exclusively online, and all with an international focus; a Small Business Law Center to serve small business entrepreneurs, artists and art organizations; and just recently, the launch of a new solo practice skills track as well as an incubator program for TJSL alumni to help jump-start their own solo practices while at the same time providing better access to justice for underserved communities. He also has significantly bolstered the academic support programs at TJSL.

Much of Dean Hasl’s time and energy the past few years has been devoted to the planning and construction of TJSL’s new eight-story, award-winning campus that opened for classes in January 2011.

“Dean Hasl has so many professional accomplishments, they would fill a book,” said Randy Grossman, a member of the TJSL Board of Trustees.

Professor Randy Grossman says “First and foremost is Dean Hasl’s achievement as the guiding force behind the building of TJSL’s state of the art new campus, one of the most technologically advanced, beautiful law schools in the country that will serve our students for many years to come. He has increased the stature of the law school and has moved us down the path to become a nationally known and respected law school.”

“He has also made a personal commitment to increase the diversity of the faculty staff and especially the students.”

Dean Hasl has extensive experience in leadership positions within the American Bar Association (ABA), the Association of American Law Schools (AALS) and the Law School Admissions Council. Dean Hasl has served as Chair of the ABA Council of the Section of Legal Education and Admissions to the Bar and its Accreditation and Standards Review Committees. He also served as the ABA representative on the board of the Council on Legal Education Opportunity (CLEO). Dean Hasl recently was appointed to serve a three-year term on the AALS Committee on the Recruitment and Retention of Minority Faculty and Students.
In addition, he served four years as a member of the TJSL Board of Trustees from 2001-2004 before being appointed Dean in 2005.

“We’ve been so incredibly lucky to have had the most experienced dean in all of US legal education as our dean for the last seven years,” said Beth Kransberger, TJSL’s Associate Dean for Student Affairs. “He is the embodiment of what it means to be an educator and, in particular, a student-centered educator. He’s pushed all the faculty and staff each day toward the aspirational ideals of legal education and worked tirelessly on behalf of our students. We’ll also miss the twinkle in his eye when he talks about the drought tolerant plants on our outdoor terraces and Thomas Jefferson’s fascination with paleontology!”

"Dean Hasl has spearheaded increased diversity on the faculty and the student body so that Thomas Jefferson now has the distinction of being one of the most diverse law schools in the country," said TJSL Professor Marjorie Cohn. "He has also shepherded the school into an impressive new building that is located downtown, which is closer to the courts and attorneys for student internships. Its technologically advanced classrooms provide us with opportunities for more effective teaching."

“I have been blessed with challenging opportunities at each of the schools where I have served as Dean,” said Dean Hasl in his retirement announcement to fellow deans at law schools across the country.

“Some of you have heard me talk about the great opportunity that a Dean has to create magical moments in the lives of others,” Dean Hasl added. “My life has been filled with so many such moments and I will continue to relish them. Those are the moments that really sustain us. I know that it seems like we are all facing the most serious challenges to legal education and to the future of our institutions. I can look back over many valleys and peaks as our profession continues to change and evolve. While the current challenges seem monumental, we can also see the beginning of the end to the current economic crises. There is reason to be optimistic about improvements that are on the horizon.”
With each passing day at the office, my blood pressure slowly rises as I stir in earnest anticipation of the reveal on November 16, 2012 at 6 p.m. If you’re a law student or bar candidate, you know exactly what hour that is. That instant, about 39 days, 10 hours, and 22 minutes from now (but who’s counting?), will reveal what I, and thousands of other bar candidates, have been aching to know since the “stop typing” call at the end of July. Bar results.

So, in effort to push reset on our lives, leave our law student personas behind, and rejoin the human race, a few buds and I took off. I mean, really took off, with nothing but our backpacks, baggies, and passports. Destination: Indonesia. Surf, tour, relax, and (attempt to) drop off the grid for a little while. We were there a month and could have stayed for four.

Out of the 26 days we were there, we had 18 surf days mostly by ourselves, shook hands with the reef, hiked a volcano, went scuba diving with Nemo, partied with the Hindus, and sat at bonfires with the wonderfully welcoming local families, eating fresh fish on the most remote beaches I have ever experienced. This, all while trying not to hurt ourselves or anyone else with our rental mopeds, surfboards strapped to the side. I couldn’t imagine a better break with better dudes. I felt like the luckiest guy alive. And I still do.

The happiness we all felt being away in such a breathtakingly beautiful country was daily punctuated by the poverty of the Indonesian people. It was everywhere. There were mountains of roadside plastic, and empty water bottles periodically bobbed by in the lineup. While that was alarming to this SoCal kid, perspective kept popping me upside the head. When it is a struggle to put food on the table, and provide the basics for your family, trash collection and sanitation become less important. But while many have very little, they are stoked about it. The point that kept clubbing me over the head was, that despite my looming student debt and bills at home, and “things” that occupied my many worries, it is all really just about people and family. Very simply, the things you own, own you. This probably flies in the face of many of the wannabe-attorneys in the audience because one of the things that drew us to this occupation was “increased earning potential,” right? But that is what really hit home for me, and I do not intend to forget it. It is one thing to like nice things – and I’d be lying if I said I didn’t – but it’s another to forget about how good we all have it.

As a traveler in a developing country (and walking dollar sign) your guard is always up. Strange people are exceptionally nice, and the immediate response is, “Okay, what’s your angle?” Well, I came to realize, that by and large, there was no angle. They were just really sweet, courteous, and accommodating people who want their guests to be happy. Show some Aloha, and they will do just about anything for you.

So there is my long-winded segue into what this piece is actually about. Guys who have lost everything, or perhaps more appropriately, given everything. Or, at the very least, a leg or two, and an arm, or both: The Wounded Warriors.

For the second year in a row, starting Saturday, October 6th, I am back in the saddle for a 160 mile journey with 90 or so of the coolest, most incredible, selfless guys I have ever met. The Wounded EOD Warriors. EOD, for the uninitiated, is Explosive Ordnance Disposal. While they are not on the headlines most of the time, they do the dirty work, in tight spaces, disarming bombs and cell-phone actuated improvised explosive devices (IEDs). Many do not return. Those that do are often wounded, most physically, all with disturbing images burned in their consciousnesses that haunt them the rest of their lives. The returning service members often have significant medical requirements, racking up bills their paychecks and military benefits do not cover. Families suffer along with the wounded. Out of these unmet needs, the Wounded EOD Warrior Foundation was born.

EOD is a joint service military, operational skill that spans all of the U.S armed services. The Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, and Army all train EOD Technicians in the nearly 7,000 member community. EOD Techs are responsible for disarming, rendering safe, and disposing of a variety of unexploded military ordnance and terrorist devices such as IEDs that have been responsible for the majority of injuries and fatalities to our troops overseas.

The Wounded EOD Warrior Foundation is a non-profit organization that provides assistance to our wounded warriors and their families. The WEOWF really is an amazing organization and has helped countless wounded service members and their families. The Undefeated, Two-Day Ride itself begins in Culver City this Saturday morning (6 October), with a stop that night in Irvine, 70 miles to the south for laughs and sleep. Sunday morning, we’re back in the saddle, finishing a 90 mile stretch at FIFTY SEVEN Degrees, at 1735 Hancock Street, in Old Town. Feel free to come out and cheer our arrival Sunday, starting at noon. There will be a party with lots of EOD displays and goodies at the end, if you care to join: www.eodride.org.

As I said, this is round two for me, having completed the trek last October, while having an absolute blast. Last year, 94 riders spun their legs for 160 miles and raised over $220,000 for the Foundation. This weekend, I heard that we have already hit the $200k mark on our way to the $250,000 goal. 160 miles might be a bit of a stretch for some, but when you’re riding next to a guy who is missing one or both of his legs (yes, we had a single-leg amputee and a double-leg amputee ride us across the finish line at Liberty Station last year) it makes you want to push that much harder, mentally and physically. Your legs may burn, but it is absolutely awe-inspiring, knowing what they and so many of our uniformed brothers and sisters have endured. We ride for the Warriors and their families and remind everyone else of their sacrifices.

While the intent of this article is not to beg for pledges, I would be remiss if I did not mention the appropriate links.

Successful Sports Law Negotiation Competition

In some ways the Second Annual Sports Law Negotiation Competition held at Thomas Jefferson School of Law the weekend of September 28-30 was twice as successful as the first one in 2011.

For example, there were twice as many teams. Forty teams from 28 different top law schools across the nation, from UCLA to Harvard, came to TJSL to compete with each other in their negotiating skills.

The overall winner was the Oklahoma City Law School Team of Javin Giesler and Cameron Feil, both 3Ls.

Second place went to Southwestern School of Law. Third place to UC Hastings and Fourth place went to Chapman.

The panel of judges in the final four was distinguished indeed. San Diego City Attorney Jan Goldsmith, Federal Magistrate and TJSL Trustee William McCurine, and Major League Hall of Famer and San Diego Padres Executive Vice-President Dave Winfield heard the teams negotiate their hypothetical scenarios.

“I was very impressed,” said Winfield. “All of the teams represented their institutions well. They were very professional.”

Overall, it was an exciting weekend for all of the participants, beginning on Friday with a private luxury box at Petco Park for everyone to watch the Padres versus San Francisco Giants. The event was hosted by the intellectual property law firm CONSOR, the overall sponsor of the competition.

Competition began on Saturday morning and ran through the entire day as the 40 teams were narrowed to the final four.

Saturday’s highlight was the keynote address by legendary sports agent Leigh Steinberg, whose career inspired the Tom Cruise Movie “Jerry Maguire.”

As the sun set in front of him and the moon rose behind him on TJSL’s 8th floor outdoor terrace, Steinberg began by saying to the many aspiring sports law attorneys and negotiators: “It’s great to speak to my people.” Steinberg shared his negotiation philosophy, which made him the first true super-agent in sports. His mantra could be: Above all, really know who is across the table from you and what makes them tick.

“Put yourself in the heart and mind of the person you’re negotiating with,” he said. “Draw out their hopes, their fears and their greatest aspirations.” And of course, he recommends that you need to research their business know it inside and out.

“The goal is to negotiate a deal that works for both sides and allows the other side to emerge with dignity and honor,” said Steinberg. “To do that, you establish a paradigm of cooperation. An aggrieved party will never give in. Your job is to quantify your offer with statistics so you can present them with a compelling reason to accept it.”

During the Steinberg’s presentation, the cheers of the Padres crowd at Petco a couple of blocks away could often be heard, as if to underscore his most important points.

Professor Rod Smith, Brandon Leopoldus ’10, Professor Randy Grossman, Professor Paul Spiegelman & Jeremy Evans ’11 at Petco Park
One thing Steinberg has always been known for is to encourage his athlete clients to get involved in their communities – to set up foundations, scholarships or other programs – to get them out of themselves and actively working on things they care about. For example, when he represented former San Diego Chargers kicker Rolf Benirscke, Steinberg and Benirscke created the “Kicks for Critters” program, which raised money for endangered species, something near and dear to Rolf’s heart.

Steinberg says the key to negotiation is to “sit down with your client and get their values down on paper – what’s most important to them. Financial security? Endorsements? Being a starter? If everything is equally important, then you can’t make a deal.”

“Always keep in mind that the quality of how you negotiate makes a difference in people’s lives,” Steinberg said as he wrapped up. “I challenge you to not be just another plumber. Make it a better world.”

Rounding out this action-packed weekend at TJSL, the 11th Annual Sports Law Symposium was held. The agenda could not have been more timely and relevant, “Negotiating Professional Athlete’s Contracts and Avoiding Major Infractions in Big time Athletic Programs: What we can learn from Penn State.”

“Thomas Jefferson was a wonderful host,” said competitor Olivera Jovanovich 3L of UC Hastings School of Law, who competed on one of the negotiation teams. “The scenarios we worked with were stimulating and challenging. A good mix of reality and imagination. We had fun.”

“It’s been great,” said competitor Amanda Singer 3L of Chapman University Law School. “It was really well organized.”

“Thank you to everyone that helped make this event such an overwhelming success, Sports Law adjunct professor Randy Grossman, who was the faculty advisor for the negotiation competition and symposium. “This competition brings national recognition and prestige to our law school and we all should be extremely proud.”

“A great success!” said Jeremy Evans NSLNC Board Member. “The NSLNC Board, Assistants, Volunteers, Judges, Competitors, our sponsor Consor, and all participants should be praised for their efforts in making the 2nd Annual National Sports Law Negotiation Competition a complete success. From the feedback received, a great time was had by all.”
This past summer I had the privilege to work on Capitol Hill as a legal intern for Congresswoman Cathy McMorris Rodgers from Washington State. I obtained this internship opportunity through AAPD, America Association for People with Disabilities. www.aapd.com. I was extremely fortunate to be one of the select few hired this past summer to serve as a Congressional intern in our nation’s capital. It was truly an honor to do so, and I had the experience of a lifetime.

One of Congresswoman McMorris Rodgers’s areas of focus and expertise is disability related issues. She is currently the Republican Leader of the Disability Caucus for the House. For most of the summer, I concentrated my efforts on issues related to the various disability laws, such as the ADAAA (Americans with Disabilities Act Amendments Act of 2008), Reauthorizing of Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and ABLE (Achieving a Better Life Experience) Act. Congresswoman McMorris Rodgers, like me, is very passionate about improving the lives of people with disabilities in employment, education, and healthcare. Though I thought I had a decent working knowledge of the disability related laws, I was surprised to discover I still had a lot to learn about my own laws, (if you get me). My time on Capitol Hill taught me just how much work remains to be done in this area of the law.

In addition to reviewing disability related laws and writing briefs and one-pagers for the Congresswoman, I was also fortunate to have the opportunity to attend numerous hearings, testimonies and mark-up meetings. Through those experiences, I gained a better understanding of how our government operates. I was also able to see firsthand how the complexities and politics of the legislative process can sometimes lead to dysfunction and delay. Good, bad or indifferent, the one thing I learned for certain is the entire legislative process is fascinating!

Finally, the highlight of my summer was meeting President Obama. This was not just a casual meet and greet event. I literally met with and spoke to the President about matters concerning those with disabilities! Long story short, I was one of just a few interns invited to a roundtable meeting with President Obama, Senior Advisor to the President Valerie Jarrett and White House Domestic Policy Council Director Cecila Munoz in the Roosevelt room of the White House. Due to scheduling constraints, the President only had time to hear from a few of us, and I was selected to be one of the speakers. Sitting four feet directly across from the President of the United States is an awe-inspiring event to be sure! I told him about the three issues that those of us in the disability community believe the President and our government must focus on in order to improve the lives of people with disabilities, which are employment, universal design and education. The President listened intently and then complimented us by saying we were the future leaders who would have a profound impact on the disability community. Needless to say, this once in a lifetime opportunity was definitely humbling for me.

Overall, working in Washington, D.C., this past summer was an amazing experience for me. It was good being back in the city where I had lived for six years prior to law school and good seeing old faces and meeting new people. D.C. is one of the most vibrant cities you will find, with an endless list of events to attend and activities to entertain you. If you ever get the opportunity to work on Capitol Hill in the future, I highly recommend you grab the chance to do so! You never know, you might be lucky enough to meet the President of the United States.

A CLE presentation on ethics by Marc Adelman ’77

By Jeremy M. Evans ’11
Alumni Association Board of Directors

As you may or may not know, the CLE presentation presented by the Alumni Association of Thomas Jefferson School of Law, on Thursday September 20, included Wall of Fame Alumnus Marc Adelman. He has been practicing law for 30-plus years and has learned a thing or two. Adelman even referred to one of his sample retainer agreements during the presentation as a work of art because it included 30 years of mistakes and, thus, lessons learned. Some of these nuggets of wisdom will be discussed later in this article. Others may remember Adelman as the former President of both the State Bar of California and the San Diego County Bar Association. Adelman is now considered an expert in his representation of attorneys and law firms in legal malpractice.

The presentation was well attended, 65-plus in attendance, and the demographics included young and more experienced attorneys.

Adelman insisted throughout his presentation that he continues to learn and make mistakes...maybe there is a reason we call it the practice of law, as we are always practicing and learning new things. For if we are not learning, we are not growing our minds or our business. Adelman continued in his presentation that specific words and sentences in his sample retainer agreement were mistakes from actual cases where he had to learn the hard way.

For example, Adelman provided that we must, in the initial client interview, actually interview the client before quoting a price or agreeing to reduce your fee. He added that you should always know the situation, facts, and generally about the client before agreeing to representation. The last statement is hard to practice especially for attorneys trying to keep the Motel 6 we’ll leave the light on (i.e., pay the bills). He continued that you should narrow the representation so you know what you are getting into, as does your client (remember to exclude appeals from representation where you are the trial lawyer).

It was a great and honest conversation from and with an attorney with much experience. For alums in all stages, Adelman is an attorney who we should emulate. For me, I will take the advice and discuss it in my next client interview or place it in my next fee agreement.

Overcoming Fear of Public Speaking

On Tuesday, September 25, students gathered to attend Phi Alpha Delta’s seminar on Public Speaking. Maysa Eissa, Esq., Associate Director of Career Services, led the lively presentation. During the presentation, Eissa provided helpful tips to help students relieve some of the anxiety associated with public speaking, such as how to convert nervous energy and anxiety to be in front of others into enthusiasm for the message they are trying to get across, as well as taking a few moments before the presentation to meet audience members to help you “humanize” your audience.

She also provided tips on how to improve common speaking issues, such as ridding yourself of the “case of the ummm...”. Students also had the opportunity to practice public speaking in small groups, as well as being put on the spot to speak in front of the entire group with no preparation at all using the techniques they just learned during the presentation.

During the presentation, Eissa assured the students that “your audience is rooting for you. Just like you, most of them are nervous to speak in public, so you are already impressive to them. If people walk away feeling like they’ve learned something of value, you have accomplished what you have set out to do.”

Eissa also asked students to push themselves and set a goal to speak in public, even if it is just to raise their hand once a week to ask a question in class, comparing it to their first childhood dive into the water—“the first one was very scary and you were filled with anxiety... who is now scared to dive into a pool?”
Professor Rod Smith Gives Two Talks at Pepperdine Law School

Thomas Jefferson School of Law Distinguished Professor Rodney Smith made two presentations at Pepperdine University School of Law on Monday, October 1.

The first talk, about religious liberty is titled “The First Amendment and the Right of Conscience: A Dying Right?” It examined the views of James Madison regarding the First Amendment – Madison is considered to be the author of the First Amendment – as a right of conscience providing protection for religious conscience, conscience generally, and identity. Professor Smith argued that the protection for religious liberty, with a free exercise and establishment provision, differs in nature from the protection provided to conscience and identity generally under the First Amendment. He also examined where we stand today, pitting interestingly enough Justice Scalia and President Obama (who oppose exemptions) against Chief Justice Roberts, President Clinton and Governor Romney, who seem to favor religious exemptions. Professor Smith will also examine the issues that arise with regard to the conflict between the Affordable Health Care Act and the rights of the Catholic Church.

Professor Smith’s second talk is titled “Gladiators in the 21st Century: Violence and Injuries in Athletics.” He stated the case that we treat our athletes like gladiators, disregarding injuries by prolonging seasons, failing to respond to evidence regarding the severity of injuries incurred (but largely latent in nature). He also urged the need for the players associations and management at the professional level and the NCAA and high school athletic associations at the amateur level to respond. Professor Smith also argued that actions by associations are preferable to litigation as a means of dealing with these issues, while offering suggestions for reform.

Related to this theme, TJS’s The Center for Sports Law and Policy, of which Professor Smith is the director, will be presenting a major conference “Gladiators in the 21st Century: Violence and Injuries in Athletics” on Saturday November 10, at the law school.

This conference will bring leading scholars and policymakers together to examine the legal and policy implications of violence and injuries in athletics. Panels made up of leaders in the field will discuss issues related to concussions and other injuries in athletics and issues of violence in athletics, including the issues of bounties and records of violent criminal activity on the part of athletes. In keeping with the mission of the Center for Sports Law and Policy at the Thomas Jefferson School of Law, this conference will focus on finding solutions to problems associated with violence and injuries in athletics.

More information about how to register for the Gladiators Conference, coming soon.
“These are simple exercises with big results,” Moretti said.

If you ask some of the people who attended what they thought of the First Fabulous Friday event, they think it was, well, fabulous!

“I love it,” said 3L Diana Malkin. “It’s great and I can’t wait to come back.”

“‘This sounded interesting,’” said 2L Mike Klitzke. “I like the idea of not needing caffeine. This is a good idea.”

Professor Jennifer Cooper, who is part of the Academic Support Team, says she does yoga regularly because it helps her to filter out daily annoyances, allowing her to focus on what’s important.

“It’s really great,” she said of the class. “It’s really timely because students are starting to get anxious over midterms.”

Professor Christensen announced that the next Fabulous Friday will be on October 5 on the 8th floor, where there’s plenty of room to spread the yoga mats she will provide.

“Our goal is to have a little bit of fun and to feel better,” she said.

Again, take a deep breath. Hold it. Now let it out. Do you feel better?

Michael Jonas ’09 Shows Some Respect

After Michael Jonas walked across the Thomas Jefferson School of Law graduation stage in June 2009, he decided to use his “lawyering skills” to make a change.

Jonas has always had an interest in social change. By combining mediation, law, community outreach, and communication-based problem solving, he started a company called GRASP Mediation, which is a San Diego-based public interest conflict resolution company (www.graspmediation.com).

“Our team has extensive conflict resolution experience combined with skills and training relating to anti-violence educational program development, litigation, restorative justice, community outreach, and non-profit program development,” Jonas explains.

The goal of GRASP is to offer not just traditional mediation services for legal cases, but also business and community services. One of the community services, called “istandup4respect,” focuses on youth and conflict resolution. To give back to the community, the company is trying to start an annual tradition in San Diego called “Respect Week”.

“Respect Week” will take place the week of October 15,” says Jonas. The program focuses on anti-violence education, youth services and peer training. “Respect Week” educates against bullying and promotes respect by encouraging students to keep an open mind, to speak freely of issues that affect them, and to hear from others that they are not alone.”

Jonas says the reason he and his company are taking this issue on is because GRASP recognizes that, in recent years, bullying among youth has increased exponentially with detrimental impacts. “Bullying has branched out past the traditional ‘sticks-and-stones’ issues that past generations have had to deal with,” says Jonas. “New forms of bullying have emerged due to advances in technology and availability to youth. GRASP wants to go beyond bullying by targeting the root issues and focusing on respecting others and yourself.”

Jonas is inviting public participation from community organizations, businesses, parents and students in this movement.

“We are currently looking for community partners and sponsors for vital components of this program,” he says.

If you would like to get involved in “Respect Week,” visit the GRASP Mediation website at: www.graspmediation.com/main/istand-up-4respect/ and email respect@graspmediation.com.

“Your support can be pivotal to the success and prevention of the damaging effects of bullying,” Jonas says. “I stand up for respect. Please stand with me for the youth of San Diego.”
The Lawyers’ Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, the San Diego offices of DLA Piper, California Common Cause and the American Civil Liberties Union need your assistance on Election Day, November 6, 2012!

The Election Protection program is the nation’s largest, nonpartisan, voter protection coalition and ensures that eligible voters across the country are guaranteed their right to cast a ballot on Election Day.

We are looking for attorneys, paralegals, law students and other interested volunteers to serve as nonpartisan poll monitors in San Diego County on November 6th. As a poll monitor you will identify and troubleshoot any issues confronting voters and you will have support from the attorneys on the national Election Protection hotline and the San Diego command center at DLA Piper.

Volunteers simply must attend a 90-minute training the week before the election and sign-up for at least one, 4-5 hour shift on Election Day.

Shifts will begin as early as 6:30 a.m. so it’s easy to volunteer and still get to work at a decent hour.

To volunteer, sign-up for a training and one or more Election Day shifts at http://volunteer.866ourvote.org.

Everyone, even those who are not lawyers or law students, should click on the lawyer sign-up button in order to pull up the San Diego trainings and shifts.

For your convenience you will see that we have midday, evening and weekend training options.

Lawyers, law students and law firms please contact Nancy Anderson, Director of Pro Bono at Lawyers Committee, at 202-662-8354 or nanderson@lawyerscommittee.org

You will notice some changes in the library this semester. We are striving to take full advantage of the design and technology in our library, both of which provide opportunities for collaborative learning. The Learning Centers on both the fourth and fifth floors will be used for classes, training sessions, vendor table days and group study more often. The fourth floor will now be actively used for collaborative learning, meaning that you should expect this area to be noisy. The fifth floor library will be the quieter study space, especially the rear portion on the South side.

We hope to have spaces in the library to meet everyone’s needs for their own individual learning style. I do ask that everyone please be respectful of those around you. To help you decide where you might enjoy studying most, we’ve included a map with areas color coded to their expected noise level. You can also find this map on the Library webpage.

I am here for any suggestions, concerns or complaints you may have about your library. Feel free to contact me in person, via email at glinman@tjsl.edu or by phone at 619-961-4278.

JUDICIAL EXTERNSHIPS AVAILABLE FOR SPRING 2013

Deadlines are September 28 and October 9

What is the judicial externship program? Our program offers students a unique opportunity to work directly with judges and their law clerks. It is highly competitive, but provides firsthand exposure to the world behind the bench. Students will be awarded academic credit upon successful completion of the program.

Requirements: You must have completed 30 units by the time the externship starts, and have completed Evidence if you are applying to Superior Court. You should be in the top 20% of your class, and it is strongly preferred that applicants be on Law Review and/or the mock trial or moot court team. A MINIMUM OF 20 HOURS PER WEEK IS REQUIRED. If you do not meet the class-ranking requirement, but feel you have applicable life or professional experience that would make you a qualified candidate, please contact Career Services to discuss best strategies for success.

What do I need to do to apply and what are the deadlines? Research the judges and courts that are listed in the Judicial Externship Informational Packet that seem best suited for you. You can pick up a copy at the Law Clinic/Externship Office located at 495 11th Avenue. The packet will walk you through all the steps necessary to apply for these prestigious positions.

Deadlines: Order official transcripts by (September 21st) and recommendation letters by (September 25th). Submit your completed packages to Alexandra Rosa in the Externship Office by October 9, 2012.

You must submit a cover letter and resume to Career Services at careerservices@tjsl.edu or Professor Tropp, Externship & Pro Bono Director at jtropp@tjsl.edu prior to applying for the job. Please be advised that by applying there is no guarantee that you will be offered an interview or an externship with these organizations. If you have questions about the Externship Program, please contact Alexandra Rosa, our Externship Coordinator, at arosa@tjsl.edu.

- The Externship Office is located at 495 11th Avenue, entrance is on 11th Avenue
